1 Cultural Heritage Background and Gazetteer

1.1 Introduction

- 1.1.1 This Appendix contains the Cultural Heritage background related to the Limit of Deviation (LoD) for the Proposed Development, and provides details of previous archaeological investigations, a historic background, the archaeological potential of the LoD, and a gazetteer of all heritage assets within the baseline, determined from the sources listed within Appendix 11.1 Cultural Heritage Assessment Methodology.
- 1.1.2 Each entry in the gazetteer has a heritage asset reference number which is used to identify it within the assessment and on Figure 11.1: Designated Heritage Assets and Figure 11.2: Heritage Assets and the Limit of Deviation. Due to the number of heritage assets within the baseline, and for ease of reference within the text and on the figure, the heritage asset reference numbers relate to the designation of the heritage assets, as follows:
- Scheduled monuments (S);
 - Listed buildings (L);
 - Gardens and Designed Landscapes or GDLs (G);
 - Conservation Areas (C);
 - Battlefields (B); and
 - Non-designated (ND).

1.2 Cultural Heritage Background

Geology

- 1.2.1 The Proposed Development stretches across the northern areas of Scotland inclusive of multiple different bedrock geologies¹. The area of Beaulieu and Inverness is largely composed of the Lower and Middle Old Red Sandstone type. The distinctive red sandstone of the Sarclet and Inverness Sandstone parent groups were quarried locally in the Moray Firth Basin and used for many of the 19th and early 20th century buildings that make up the Conservation Areas of Beaulieu and Inverness. From Inverness towards Keith the bedrock geology shifts from the red sandstones of the Moray Firth basin towards a mix of psammite and semipelite metamorphic formations of the Grampian Group and there is a pocket of igneous rock, indicative of volcanic activity in the vicinity of Ardclach.
- 1.2.2 The eastern portion of the Proposed Development, from Turriff to Peterhead, is dominated by the Macduff Formation, composed of psammite and semipelite with micaceous intrusions, and an abundance of slate. Many of the hills were utilised and quarried extensively for their slate, which was a common source of stone for roof tiles used in local architecture. Amongst the slate, there are small pockets of sandstone, which was quarried with care and reserved for more important buildings, still seen in surviving castles. The eastern-most extent near Peterhead is largely the granite deposits responsible for the granite stone overwhelmingly used in eastern coastal architecture, such as in Aberdeen.

- 1.2.3 The superficial geology across the Proposed Development is generally composed of tills¹. Tills are the unsorted deposits of rock fragments, gravels, sands, silts, and clays distributed by the glacial movements in northern Scotland during and after the Ice Age between 116 and 118 thousand years ago. Areas of tills are cut by river valley, glaciofluvial, and alluvium deposits (such as the Deveron and Spey Valleys) deposited by the rivers created by melting and run off from glaciers. These valleys were attractive settlement locations for prehistoric and early populations, given the shelter they provided, the access to water, and the free-draining properties of the sediment deposits. Where the soils do not benefit from the well-draining properties of the coarser-grained deposits, poorer draining occurs creating waterlogged conditions, ultimately creating areas of peat bog. While particularly good for preservation of organic remains, these areas are not anticipated to have much evidence of earlier settlements. Areas of peat bog are spread across the central and northern Highlands.

Previous Archaeological Investigations

- 1.2.4 There have been seven archaeological investigations which have intersected with various locations along the LoD of the Proposed Development, including watching briefs, evaluations, and site walkover surveys. These are summarised below. Heritage assets identified from these previous investigations have been added to the gazetteer where the records are yet to be included within the local HER.
- Lower Achnagairn, Kirkhill (HER ID: EHG618) – A watching brief was undertaken by J Hooper in 2001 in advance of the construction of a house at Lower Achnagairn, Kirkhill. No archaeological features were identified.
 - Beaully-Denny OHL Tower BF8, Fanellan, Beaully (EHG4773) – A series of archaeological features, of possible prehistoric date, were identified during an archaeological watching brief by Northlight Heritage supervising topsoil stripping at Fanellan, near Beaully in 2011.
 - Knocknagael Substation and associated works (EHG3537, EGH3541, EHG4167, EHG5278) – A watching brief and excavations were carried out by Highland Archaeology Services in January 2010 in advance of a new substation and associated works. The works identified some linear features, none of which are within the LoD for the Proposed Development.
 - Inverboyndie to New Deer, Moray East Offshore Windfarm Cable Route (NJ66SE0330) – A watching brief and excavation was carried out by CFA from November 2018 to October 2019. A number of prehistoric settlement remains were identified and recorded, though none within the LoD for the Proposed Development.
 - Tomcork (NJ04NW0103) – A watching brief was carried out by CFA in 2013 during groundworks for a works compound for a windfarm construction. No archaeological features or artefacts were observed.
 - HVDC Link from Portgordon to Blackhillock, Keith (NJ45NW0044) – A watching brief was carried out by Headland Archaeology in 2015. Eleven archaeological features were recorded including rig and furrow, pits, ditches, and a burnt mound, though none are within the LoD for the Proposed Development.
 - Berry Burn Substation (NJ04NW0135) – A watching brief and desk-based assessment was carried out by CFA Archaeology in September 2012. The investigations identified a number of cairns and a prehistoric field system. The features were documented and then destroyed.

Baseline Discussion (including Kellas Alternative Alignment)

- 1.2.5 There are 831 heritage assets included within the baseline for the assessment. 425 of these heritage assets are noted within the LoD, consisting of 14 designated heritage assets and 411 non-designated heritage assets. A further 379 designated heritage assets are contained within the study area, as defined within the main chapter (Chapter 11: Cultural Heritage), with an additional 27 designated heritage assets added to the baseline following consultation with HES.
- 1.2.6 The heritage assets within the baseline are detailed within the Gazetteer (see Annex A: Cultural Heritage Gazetteer) and discussed in the context of a timeline of archaeological periods from prehistoric through to modern.

Prehistoric Period (13,000 BCE to CE 400)

- 1.2.7 The Palaeolithic and Mesolithic periods in northern Scotland extend from the end of the last glaciation, c. 13,000 BCE to the arrival of farming, c. 4,000 BCE. The period is largely characterised by settlement traces in the form of cave and rock-shelters, shell middens and lithic scatters. Palaeolithic communities would have been nomadic, hunting and gathering resources as they moved to areas free of ice. They would have utilised basic stone tools and moved in seasonal cycles over wide areas. Basic stone tools were eventually replaced due to more advanced techniques of tool making being developed, which eventually led to the Mesolithic period. The inhabitants of the Mesolithic would still have been transient hunter-gatherers and left little evidence of settlement and other activity in the landscape. Most Mesolithic heritage assets relate to flint scatters and midden deposits and tend to be closer to the coast. There are no heritage assets definitively dated to the Palaeolithic or Mesolithic periods within the LoD or study area.
- 1.2.8 The Neolithic (c. 4,000 BCE to 2,500 BCE) and Bronze Age (c 2,500 BCE to 1,000 BCE) periods in Scotland are identified through evidence of the development of more sedentary lifestyles, with seasonal rather than continual movements becoming more evident alongside the growth of farming. Low-lying areas in glens, typically of free-draining sands and gravels, with access to fresh running water were the ideal soil environments for people to cultivate. Settlement evidence from these periods is identifiable due to the semi-transient nature of activity and is typically evidenced by pit clusters, field systems, hut circles, and enclosures mainly visible as cropmarks. Non-settlement evidence in the early Neolithic period saw the first examples of pottery and higher quality stone tools such as polished stone axe-heads, which are found along the length of the LoD (MHG3475; ND53), their presence denotes some Neolithic activity but cannot be used to draw any larger assumptions of the settlement patterns of prehistoric populations.
- 1.2.9 The Late Neolithic (3,300 BCE to 2,500 BCE) saw more complex, ritual structures erected in the landscape usually in conspicuous locations. The heritage assets from this period include burial cairns and mounds, standing stones, and stone circles. Little is known of the purpose and function of stone circles and standing stones, and it is not known if the purpose can be singularly defined for each example of these. Generally, these monuments are found closely associated with and overlooking a nearby watercourse and glen, with some being intervisible with each other.
- 1.2.10 Recumbent stone circles are geographically linked to Aberdeenshire, where up to 99 examples have been recorded. The only other location in the British Isles where recumbent stone circles are consistently seen is in south-west Ireland. These monuments are composed of a ring of monoliths with a typically larger, flatter stone lying prostrate (recumbent stone), creating a flat level surface, flanked by the two tallest stones (flankers). The following are examples of recumbent stone circles within the baseline:
- Arn Hill, stone circle, Rothiemay Station (SM4; S41);
 - Stone Circle, 660 m NW Of Hillhead Of Frendraught (SM13790; S45);
 - Stone circle, 365 m WSW of Raich Farm (SM42; S46);
 - Hare Stone, stone circle 480 m NW of Feith-Hill (SM338; S47);
 - North Pitglassie, stone circle 1320 m SW of (SM38; S48);
 - Mains of Hatton stone circle (SM30; S49); and
 - Corrydown, stone circle 150 m NE of (SM16; S50).

- 1.2.11 Burial cairns tend to have regional types as well, and the Clava cairns are a type-site of burial cairn, which is limited geographically to the areas of the Moray Firth and Inverness where about 50 are known, including several within the baseline: Culburnie, ring cairn and stone circle (SM2425; S1), Mains of Daviot Farm, ring cairn and stone circle (SM3085, S20), Crow Wood Cottage, chambered cairn and standing stones (SM115456; S10), Culdoich, chambered cairn and standing stone (SM11851; S25), and the set of cairns that the typology was named after, the Clava cairns (SM90074; S30), located to the south of Culloden battlefield (BTL; B1). Clava cairns are distinct not only in structure, but also in their locations in river valleys and lower ground, converse to what is seen of other burial cairns from this period that tend to occupy higher ground, such as the Carn Glas Chambered Cairn (SM2392; S16).
- 1.2.12 Conventionally, the Iron Age of northern Scotland spans the early first millennium BCE to the fourth century CE. However, the period can extend to CE 800, with the Late Iron Age often referred to as the 'Pictish' period. The climate in Scotland became wetter during the Iron Age leading to less available land for settlement, concentrating populations, resulting in defensive settlements being erected on higher ground. These hillforts, some of which were constructed with high stone walls but more commonly seen with extensive earthwork ramparts and rings, are seen within the baseline, particularly on numerous summits and promontories to the south of Inverness, including Corff House, fort (SM3195; S3) and Dun Mor, fort (SM2423; S6).

Roman Period (CE 77 to 211)

- 1.2.13 The Roman period in Scotland is short lived and mainly focussed around southern and central Scotland, with the construction of the Antonine Wall around 150 CE indicating a limited desire for the Romans to proceed north into the Highlands. Further forts and fortlets were built up towards Perth along the Gask Ridge, and there is known Roman activity within the study area at Easter Galcantray (MHG6892), also known as Cawdor (Roman fort), located to the east of Inverness, and thought to be the most northern Roman fort in Scotland. A Roman camp at Auchinhove (ND243) is located within the LoD. It was identified from aerial imagery and is dated to the Flavian period (AD 77-86/90) based on the presence of Stracathro-type gates at the eastern entrance. The camp is substantially further north than the northernmost Roman Gask fort from the Flavian period, at Stracathro, near Brechin, where the style of such gates were named after. Although Roman activity is known as far north as Moray, there are limited permanent installations².

Pictish Period (CE 300 - CE 800)

- 1.2.14 The Pictish period of northern Scotland overlaps with the Late Iron Age spanning from c. 297 CE to c. 800 CE and is typically represented by settlement sites, structures, and most notably carved stones. Pictish society consisted of a dynamic network of kingdoms controlled by potentates, kings, sub-kings, and chiefs. The Picts reused earlier hillforts and built new defensive enclosures, which were vital during the 8th century when Vikings and other raider groups attacked Pictish settlements from the north, west, and south. The known evidence of Pictish activity within the baseline is limited to a Pictish barrow and cemetery (National Record of the Historic Environment (NRHE) ID 339578; ND199) and inscribed stones, such as the Balblair Stone, symbol stone, Moniak Castle Wineries (SM932; S7).

Medieval Period (CE 800 – CE 1614)

- 1.2.15 Permanent settlements slowly continued to develop and cluster, leading up to and through the medieval period. The conversion of Scotland to Christianity strongly influenced the structure of communities. As a result, in the histories related to medieval Scotland, religion had significant control and influence. This is reflected in the archaeological record by the prominence of heritage assets such as churches, churchyards, and castles dating from this period onward.

² Wooliscroft, D.J and Hoffman, B (2006) Rome's First Frontier, The Flavian Occupation of Northern Scotland

- 1.2.16 Villages and towns normally clustered around churches, symbolically, as Christianity was central to both physical and spiritual life. Churches were built to serve communities and were organised by Parishes. Medieval towns and hubs were largely clustered on coastlines and shores of larger lochs, still reliant on the resources the water provided. Two such hubs along the Proposed Development, include Kiltarlity and Ardclach in the west, containing Kiltarlity Old Parish Church (SM5570; S2), and Ardclach Bell Tower (LB551; L95) and Ardclach Old Parish Church (LB554; L96) respectively. Historic parish boundaries were marked in the landscape by some features, often times planted vegetation, or boundary stones. Some of these boundary stone lines survive visibly, such as those at Lenshaw (NJ64SE0015; ND302) and Hart Hill (NJ25SW0022; ND169), where the historic parishes are unchanged.
- 1.2.17 Surrounding the semi-concentrated centres of the medieval towns and villages was agricultural land for both subsistence and trade. In the more rural areas of Aberdeenshire where agricultural land has remained as such there survives evidence of rig and furrow dating from at least the early medieval period, visible as subtle peaks, and troughs in cultivated fields.

Post-medieval Period (CE 1614 - CE 1900)

- 1.2.18 Religious and political changes characterise the post-medieval period in Scotland, brought about by the Reformation in the 16th century, the union of the crowns in 1603 under James VI, followed by religious unrest and civil war throughout the 17th and 18th centuries. These religious and political changes are seen in changes in church architecture, with former Catholic churches destroyed and replaced with newer structures when the Church of Scotland was pushed into the Highlands to extinguish folk religion and Gaelic tradition. An example of this within the baseline can be seen at Kiltarlity Old Parish Church (SM5570; S2) where an earlier 13th century church was replaced in the 16th century.
- 1.2.19 The baseline also contains the most notable heritage asset from this period, related to the civil war, and what was to be the last pitched battle on the British mainland. The Battle of Culloden (BTL6; B1) was fought in 1746 on Drummoissie Moor to the south of Culloden and ended with the Jacobite rebellion being crushed after half a century of fighting. The outfall from the rebellion was the opening up of the Highlands through road and estate building, which eventually led to the Highland Clearances: the forced evictions and mass population movements of crofters and subsistence farmers from their land. This mass upheaval left the physical remains of farmsteads and stone built crofts abandoned in the rural areas of Northern Scotland. Many of the buildings remain in a preserved condition, having been immediately utilised as grazing land, such as Easter Rattich, depopulated settlement (SM11876; S31).
- 1.2.20 Urban growth with large scale industrial projects were introduced in the 19th century including improved travel ways, railway and station construction, and expansion of trade and trade routes. Bridges and viaducts for the railway and roads, such as Deveron Railway Bridges (LB3018; L283) and Culloden Muir Viaduct (LB1709; L84), are located within the baseline, and the Caledonian Canal was constructed in the early 19th century by Thomas Telford as another means of transporting goods to help this process of industrialisation. The Industrial Revolution in rural and Northern Scotland introduced and reinvested in mills and other trade buildings, many of which are still in use.
- 1.2.21 The post-medieval period also saw the appearance of estates and estate houses. An influx of money, ownership changes and population shifts during this period resulted in these grand houses and replaced tower-houses and earlier medieval castles throughout the 17th and 18th centuries. Examples within the baseline include Beaufort Castle (LB8068; L16), Reelig House (LB7821; L59), House of Daviot (LB1702; L82), Corse House (LB9452; L291), and Skelmuir House (LB16056; L341).

- 1.2.22 These estate houses commanded vast lands surrounding them and often had steadings, farms, and designed gardens. Trees were planted in the gardens as part of the designs, and many have been left untouched owing to the often, unbroken chain of ownership, resulting in mature woodlands of diverse and exotic tree species. Beaufort Castle (GDL00052; G1) and Hatton Castle (GLD00399; G10) estates are examples of particularly well-preserved designed landscapes, containing buildings of architectural merit as well as being of archaeological, scenic, and horticultural interest.
- 1.2.23 A review of the Ordnance Survey mapping from the 19th century³ suggests that as major trade routes grew, population grew around established towns with specific trade offerings. Many towns in Aberdeenshire were centred around trade or were designated market towns, like Huntly and Keith that specialised in spinning and weaving. The majority of the remaining post-medieval heritage assets within the baseline are Category A, B, and C Listed Buildings or non-designated agricultural remains, which date from the 18th to the 19th centuries.

Modern Period (CE 1901 – present)

- 1.2.24 The modern period of the Highlands, Moray and Aberdeenshire saw the continued development of travel, with the consolidation of railways, widening of main thoroughfares, and further expansion of towns. The World Wars in the first half of the 20th century drafted many of the northern populations, and war memorials such as Colonel Shand's Monument (LB9447; L297) and War Memorial Clock Tower, Newmill (LB8705; L274), were built as reminders of the sacrifices made. Outside of the built-up areas, the landscape was altered very little during the modern period, with the land remaining predominantly rural and agricultural.

Archaeological Potential

- 1.2.25 This section discusses the archaeological potential of the LoD for the Proposed Development to contain currently unknown archaeological remains. The archaeological potential is assessed for each chronological period, based on the archaeological and historical background of the area, its geology and topography, the likelihood for evidence of past activity, and considering past disturbance which may have affected survival. For example, the LoD may have high potential for the presence of an activity of a particular period, but with low survival. This section also includes professional opinion on the likely cultural significance of such remains, where there is low to high potential for such to be present. For each chronological period where the potential is assessed as negligible, this implies that remains from the period are not anticipated to be present in the LoD of the Proposed Development, and an assessment of cultural significance is not made.

Factors affecting archaeological survival

- 1.2.26 The Proposed Development crosses a large area with variable topographies and land use but would avoid areas of previous modern development. The higher areas tend to have been utilised for forestry plantation and pastoral agricultural activity, with heritage assets from all periods typically surviving as visible earthworks. In areas of forestry plantation, heritage assets are seen to have survived these activities, but the drainage and ploughing conducted will have reduced the potential for sub-surface archaeological remains to survive without truncation. The lower topographies tend to have been used for arable and pastoral agriculture, with the majority of fields in these areas likely to have been ploughed at some point in the past. Where the agricultural activity is currently arable in nature and annual ploughing is taking place, there is likely to be a higher potential for truncation of any archaeological remains to varying extents, but it would be anticipated that archaeological remains would survive below plough depth.

³ National Library of Scotland: <https://maps.nls.uk/>

Prehistoric

- 1.2.27 The LoD for Proposed Development has medium potential to contain prehistoric archaeological remains. There are known prehistoric heritage assets within the LoD, including areas of ritual activity, specifically in the area of Frendraught where a cluster of at least six known stone circles are located on summits and specifically at Daltullich and Culloiden where there is a concentration of clava cairns and Bronze Age activity. There is potential for settlement activity where the Proposed Development crosses river valleys and the underlying geological conditions are favourable. Areas of higher ground have less potential for archaeological remains. Any archaeological remains are most likely to be related to settlement activity, but in areas containing the stone circles there is a higher probability for ritual or funerary activity. Archaeological remains relating to this period would be of medium to high value, dependant on their condition.

Roman

- 1.2.28 The LoD for the Proposed Development has negligible potential to contain Roman period archaeological remains. There is only one known Roman heritage asset in the baseline and this is a very rare location for a heritage asset of this period, with very little evidence of Roman activity in Scotland to the north of Perth.

Pictish

- 1.2.29 The LoD for the Proposed Development has negligible potential to contain Pictish period archaeological remains. There are few known heritage assets that date to the Pictish period within the baseline and it is rare to encounter archaeological remains that can be definitively linked to this period due to the continuation and reuse of earlier settlements from the Iron Age.

Medieval

- 1.2.30 The LoD for the Proposed Development has low potential to contain medieval archaeological remains. There is some archaeological evidence of medieval activity within the baseline, mostly related to ecclesiastical heritage assets. During the medieval period, the LoD for the Proposed Development would have been rural and likely used for agriculture with some potential for settlements that were unknown from historical records. Any previously unrecorded archaeological remains dating to the medieval period are likely to be agricultural in nature and limited to cultivation remains and field boundaries, or small, household industries such as corn drying kilns. Archaeological remains related to agricultural activity would be of negligible to low value, whereas small industrial or settlement archaeological remains would be of low to medium value.

Post-medieval

- 1.2.31 The LoD for the Proposed Development has low potential to contain post-medieval archaeological remains. The current range of known archaeological evidence and historic mapping suggests that it is unlikely that there will be unknown post-medieval archaeological remains surviving below-ground as the majority of field boundaries and areas of agriculture have remained as such since this period. If present, remains would likely be related to cultivation remains and drainage, and would be of negligible value.

Modern

- 1.2.32 The LoD for the Proposed Development has negligible potential to contain modern archaeological remains. There is no historical or cartographic evidence to suggest that there will be any additional modern archaeological remains within the LoD.

Annex A: Cultural Heritage Gazetteer

1.2.33 The tables below provide locations, names, and reference numbers for each of the heritage assets within the baseline for the cultural heritage assessment. The detailed descriptions of the heritage assets can be found at the following locations:

- HES Historic Environment Portal (Search) can be used to search for scheduled monuments, listed buildings, GDLs, and battlefields using the references in the tables;
- Highland Council conservation areas: Highland Conservation Areas | Conservation Areas | The Highland Council;
- Moray Council conservation areas: List of Conservation Areas - Moray Council;
- NRHE (Welcome to trove.scot | The key to Scotland's past) can be used to search the NRHE;
- Highland Council Historic Environment Record (HER): Home - Highland Historic Environment Record for additional information on designated and non-designated heritage assets in the Highland Council region. Highland Council HER references begin with MHG;
- Moray Council and Aberdeenshire Council HER: Archaeology Service Historic Environment Record \(HER\) for additional information on designated and non-designated heritage assets in the Moray Council and Aberdeenshire Council regions. Moray council and Aberdeenshire Council HER references begin with NJ or NK.

1.2.34 The following colour codes have been used to identify the mitigation strategies for each heritage asset, as described in Section 11.5.1 of Chapter 11: Cultural Heritage:
